Religious freedom and secular state".

The meeting discussed the legal regulation of religious freedom in Russia and German today, problems involved in implementing freedom of religion in the public space and relationships between freedom of faith and the democratic public order.

The St. Petersburg Dialogue is a forum of the civil societies in Russia and Germany. Established in 2001 at the initiative of Russian President V. Putin and German Chancellor G. Schroeder, it is called to promote mutual understanding between Germany and Russia and comprehensive bilateral cooperation. It consists of 100-150 participants from each side. They represent various issue groups.

The Churches in Europe working group is the "youngest" unit in the Dialogue's structure. It first met in 2007 in Wiesbaden. It includes representatives of Christian confessions in Russia and Germany.
